

BAD CHECK ARTIST
TAKES OWN LIFE

Charles G. Weatherby, who made his home with Mr. Hillary Forde, 471 Winchester street, committed suicide by shooting himself above the heart last Wednesday at 3:30 P. M., while Chief of Police Doyle, of Daly City, and several San Francisco police officers sat in an outer room awaiting his appearance, with the intention of arresting him.

Weatherby was wanted on a charge of non-support of his three-year-old son, and also for passing bad checks.

Weatherby, who is but 23 years old, was removed to St. Luke's hospital in the San Francisco police car.

Everything possible was done for the injured man, at first it being believed that he would recover, but at 6:30 he passed away.

When the officers drove up to the Ford home, Weatherby is said to have told Mrs. Ford: "They will never get me alive." He went into the bathroom as the police entered the house. Weatherby shot himself when one of the officers attempted to break in the door.

The warrant charging failure to provide was sworn out by Weatherby's young wife, Leonore, 956 Stanyan street. Another warrant accused him of forging the name of his father, Charles G. Weatherby, of San Francisco, on a check for $28.

POPULAR COUPLE ARE UNITED IN MARRIAGE

Miss Marie Ann Brugnone, popular daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. Brugnone, of Gilbert street, became the bride of one of Daly City's most popular young men, Lamar Johnson, last Sunday at 4 o'clock, at St. Peter and Paul's church.

The bride wore a white satin Princess gown and long veil draped to her head like a cap, and caught with orange blossoms. She carried a lovely shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Louise Brugnone, a sister of the bride, wore a Nile green Princess satin gown and a green satin hat with a long green tulle streamer at the end of which was a miniature bouquet of lilies of the valley. Green shoes and hat completed the outfit. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of pink roses.

Miss Rose Brugnone, maid of honor, also a sister of the bride, wore a Princess gown of coral satin and shoes and hose to match, and carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Mrs. Josephine Tesene, matron of honor, was dressed in a fashionable gown of blue satin, with shoes and hose to match, and carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Councilman A. J. Bodien acted as best man, and Joseph S. Hare and Harold Tesene were the ushers.

After the wedding ceremony the bridal party and a few close friends and relatives gathered at the Silver Slipper Cafe, where an artistically decorated table awaited their arrival. A delicious wedding dinner was enjoyed by the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. Lamar Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. B. Brugnone, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lozi, Mr. and Mrs. H. Tesene, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Coyne, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dalton, Mrs. Mary Dalton, Miss Louise Brugnone, Miss Rose Brugnone, Miss Collista Dalton, Miss Laura Balazino, Mr. A. J. Dalton, Mr. Joseph S. Hare, Mr. Joseph Balazino, Mr. Cyril Branley, Masters Louis Lozzi and Jack Dalton.

A reception and dance was held in Mission Turn Hall at 3541 Eighteenth street, at 7:30 P. M. A five piece orchestra furnished the music for dancing. During the intermissions, Master Philip Schiavi rendered accordion solo selections.

Many Daly City people attended the reception in the evening, and dancing continued until a late hour. All the friends of the bridal couple departed wishing the newly-weds much happiness.

The happy young couple departed on a honeymoon trip through Northern California. Upon their return they will make their home in Daly City.

WOMAN IS INJURED
IN AUTO COLLISION

At ten o'clock last Sunday evening, a Pierce-Arrow sedan driven by Erna Helms, of Hayward, and a Chrysler sedan driven by Jack Peterson, of 328 Grant street, San Francisco, collided at School and Mission streets. Mrs. Jack Peterson, who was riding with her husband, received a severe laceration on the forehead. She was taken to St. Luke's hospital by Officer W. Sunderland, where the wound was dressed by the surgeon in attendance.

DALY CITY WOMAN HAS A CLOSE CALL

Mrs. C. Shuttleworth, of Frankfort street, had a very narrow escape from death last Friday about 4:30 P. M.

While she was using Naptha, a cleaning fluid, to clean a gown, the fluid exploded and she was badly burned about the head and face, her hair being singed, and both arms badly burned.

George Gordon, a young boy in the neighborhood, heard Mrs. Shuttleworth scream, and dashed into the house. He attempted to smother the flames, and then ran to the fire box and turned in an alarm.

The injured woman was taken to Dr. Harner's office, where she was given medical attention.

WELL BABY CLINIC
RESUMES ACTIVITY

The "Daly City Children's Health Center," Well Baby Clinic, was opened on Wednesday morning, September 17, for the first time in six weeks. The clinic was held in the new Parent-Teachers' rooms on Wellington avenue, with Dr. Hildegard Henderson, of the Children's hospital, in charge, assisted by the board of directors from the three Daly City Parent-Teachers' Association.

The board of directors wish to announce that the general running expenses and the cost of organization was supplied by the Crocker-Pershing, Woodrow Wilson and Vista Grande Parent-Teachers' Associations. The doctor's salary is paid by the San Mateo Chapter, American Red Cross. Workers and supplies are furnished by the three P. T. A.'s.

Twenty infants and small children were examined at the clinic on the 17th. This activity is proving quite popular with the mothers of Daly City and the sponsors hope that the general public will take an interest in this work.

The next clinic will be held October 1, on Wellington avenue, near Mission street. The hours are 9:30 to 11:30 A. M. Any mother wishing to register her infant or child up to 6 years old are welcome to attend on any clinic day.

CROCKER P. T. A. MEETS

A meeting of the Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association was held on September 16 in the attractive new rooms on Wellington avenue, near Mission street. A large attendance enjoyed the meeting, which was in charge of Mrs. Julia V. Jordan, the president.

A membership drive will be held in the near future, and it is hoped that all those interested in Parent-Teachers' work will join with the members of the association the coming year. The meeting day has been changed to the second Tuesday of each month, and afternoon whist will be held on one day each month.

A program consisting of dancing, races for young and old, "barn yard golf," etc., with suitable awards, has been arranged. Coffee will be served gratis, but all are warned to bring their own cups. All are invited.

ANDERSON CASE IS AGAIN POSTPONED

Antone Anderson, fisherman, who is charged with the murder of Allan Curry, a San Francisco game warden, and Jack Burke, of Daly City, was taken before Justice of the Peace Perry Jackson at Burlingame last Wednesday, but his hearing was again postponed.

Postponement was due to the absence of Dr. Walter Berger, autopsy surgeon, who will be the prosecution's chief and most valuable witness in the case against Anderson. Berger, according to Judge Jackson, is at present visiting in the east.

The hearing will be held before Judge Jackson on October 24, next.

Anderson's case is presenting San Mateo county authorities with a puzzling problem, for although he has confessed to the shooting and killing of Curry and Jack Burke, former game warden, his version of the gun battle and facts leading up to it will be the only one offered because he is the sole survivor of the tragedy.

The huge fisherman has already told authorities a story of his battling Curry and Burke in self defense; of how he was shot down first and then returned the fire which proved fatal to both men.

The encounter resulted months ago just off Burlingame on a tiny boat when Curry and Burke attempted to confiscate a fishing net which, it was alleged, was being illegally used by Anderson. Gun play followed, with the result that Anderson is alleged to have killed both officers and been wounded seriously himself.

He piloted his small boat with the dead aboard it to San Francisco, where he turned the bodies over to the coroner and gave himself up to police. For months he lay between life and death at a San Francisco hospital. He is at liberty on $10,000 bail.

CHILD IS INJURED IN FREAK ACCIDENT

Last Saturday afternoon, at 4.45, Frances Davis, a 5-year-old girl, was playing on Bellevue avenue, between Acton and Oliver streets, when she ran into the rear end of a Studebaker touring car operated by David Kennedy, of Frankfort street. The little victim was taken to South San Francisco Hospital for examination. She received several scratches and bruises and was badly frightened. Frances was later returned to the home of her parents at 754 Niantic avenue.

"BLOODSTAINS" NAME OF PASTOR'S SERMON

Grace Presbyterian church is very fortunate in having a coterie of gifted young people who do much to make the services attractive. On Sunday evening at 7:45 o'clock the pastor will preach on the subject, "Bloodstains." The appearance is always startling. The first question we usually ask is, "Are they human bloodstains?" Come and see. Strangers are always welcomed at the services.

Auto Crash Victim Gets $3,000

Mary Lusardi, injured last New Year's night in an automobile accident at Daly City, was awarded a verdict of $3,000 by a jury in superior court at Redwood City last Monday. Clifford Nodes, driver of the car in which the girl was injured was awarded a verdict of $500. John Prukops was the driver of the other car, and the defendant in the suit for damages.

MERCHANTS' NINE
AGAIN VICTORIOUS

The Daly City Merchants went on a scoring spree in the fifth inning of their contest with the Gold Bonds last Sunday to chalk up the sixteenth victory of the season. The final score was 16 to 4.

This was the fourth game Daly City played on the Rolph diamond, and on each occasion they have brought home the bacon. Pat Sloan's hitting has been a main factor in every victory. The "slugger" collected a home run, triple and single in four times at bat, breaking all of his previous run-making efforts.

The Merchants staked Gene Keagle, local pitcher to a lead in the second inning of this contest, and from previous records it appears as though that is all he needs to win. Gene has not lost a game in which Daly City gave him a margin to work on.

While Keagle was allowing the batters only five hits, the local batters clouted Courtney and McDonald's offerings hard and often. Besides Sloan, four other Merchants enjoyed a good day at the plate. Cruchoff, Strand, Rettig and Plansky each collected two bingles. The longest of the eight blows was Duke's home run in the fifth frame.

Manager Cavagnaro had planned on making many changes in the local lineup if Daly City obtained a big lead. His chance came in the last frame. Pat Sloan pitched, Al Toole caught, and every other member traded positions. Sloan walked two batters but retired the side without a hit or run. A double play, Strand to Keagle, relieved the situation.

The box score follows:

Gold Bonds	AB.	R.	H.
Noakes, 2b	3	1	2

McDonald, 1b-p	4	0	2

Daly City will cross bats with Gaggero's All Stars next Sunday. Both teams have lost only one contest in the last nine starts. The opposing nine is considered the best in San Francisco, while Daly City ranks in the first four. The outcome will probably depend on Keagle's effectiveness. Watch for a local victory, especially if Collett, a fast ball artist, twirls for Gaggero. The game will be played on Rolph diamond, starting at 12 o'clock.

SUPERVISORS DECIDE
FARRELL MUST RUN AGAIN

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Tuesday completed the recount of votes cast in the First township for justice of the peace, and Justice Edward Farrell of South San Francisco will be forced to run again in November to retain his office. Farrell claimed that he was elected in the primary because he received a majority of the ballots cast.

The recount, however, shows that there were 7,216 votes cast for justice in the First township and Farrell received only 3,339 or nearly 300 short of a majority. Consequently he will be forced to seek re-election in November.

FORMER THEATRE MAN
GETS 8 YEARS IN PRISON

Despite his attorney's plea that he be given a sanity test, William J. Casey, former manager of a motion picture theatre, has been sentenced to eight years in Federal prison.

Casey pleaded guilty to defrauding the Daly City branch of the Bank of Italy of $14,000, with the help of two youthful bank employees. Casey's attorney claimed the defendant was mentally irresponsible about money matters.

PESCADERO HOST TO DISTRICT P. T. A.

The last regular meeting of the Seventeenth District, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, was held in Pescadero, September 19, Mrs. J. R. Spann presiding.

The morning session consisted of the regular business meeting. It was decided to sponsor the annual San Mateo County Fall Flower Show, to be held on October 24, 25 and 26.

The regular meeting in November is to be held in the evening at the Burlingame High School, November 19, at 8 o'clock. This is so the fathers and teachers will have the pleasure of attending.

The Seventeenth District is to have an office at Levee Bros. store. Here material for all branches of P. T. A. work may be secured.

Two dollars and fifty cents for every twenty-five members was asked of the associations, to be given the districts as a freewill offering.

A lovely Spanish luncheon was served by the members of the Pescadero P. T. A.

The afternoon session opened with music furnished by the pupils of the Pescadero High School Glee Club and the Pescadero Union High School Orchestra.

Installation was held, Mrs. Owens presiding as installing officer. Mrs. John Dias is the president for the coming term.

Dr. Ella S. Stadtmuller was speaker of the day and was heartily enjoyed by all. Several nurses of the county spoke of their work and the wonderful opportunities that the school children of today have in keeping not only their teeth well cared for but also their health.

This meeting is one to be remembered, as the day was beautiful and the hostess showed one and all a lovely time.

The year books of the district for Daly City P. T. A.'s can be had at Mrs. Boyle's, at 131 Winchester street.

JEFFERSON TEAM
WINS LEAGUE TILT

Out-playing and out-smarting Half Moon Bay from start to finish, the Jefferson high school football team won their initial "B" division league contest, 13 to 0, last Friday on the artichokers' field. The Indians scored both touchdowns in the second quarter.

A desperate line-plunging attack that started on Half Moon's 36 yard line netted Jefferson the first six points. Kalinin, Belli and SoRelle alternated in carrying the pigskin to the one yard marker, where the latter broke all barriers. On the following kick-off two local players, Behill and SoRelle, recovered the ball in the end zone for another touchdown. Kalinin converted to end the scoring.

The Indians registered eight first downs and gained 123 yards from scrimmage, while the artichokers' best efforts produced only two first downs and a total of 26 yards gained. Jefferson also ran back six intercepted passes some 145 steps. These facts were made possible only by hard fighting on the local players' part.

Jefferson's defence was working in accordance with the offence. Every man on the line deserves some credit for the excellent showing. The fact that both of Half Moon's first downs were made via the air route gives you some idea of the accomplishment.

Coach Biagini, a recent graduate from Stanford, should be congratulated on the vast improvement shown by the Jefferson gridders. He has rounded a bunch of "green" material into championship contenders.

The Indians play South San Francisco in a league game today on the local gridiron.

The starting lineups for last Friday's game were:

Jefferson—Flannigan, M. Bouskus, Davis, Gaggero, Guerrero, N. Sanbrailo, J. Sanbrailo (C.), SoRelle, Harper, Belli, Kalinin. Substitutes: Hoar, Behill, Dowdell, Jacques, Capps and Pederson.

Half Moon Bay—Hatch, Georfiotti, Montavelo, Webb, Watt, Wainright, Torres, Ferriera, Nunes, Ricci (C), and Angelina.

CROCKER SEWING CIRCLE MEET

The sewing circle of the Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association met in their club rooms on Wellington avenue on Friday of last week. The meeting was well attended. Those present were Mrs. J. Jordan, Mrs. I. Yates, Mrs. B. MacCarthy, Mrs. L. Forest, Mrs. Della Campbell, Mrs. Orville Pauw, Mrs. M. Chesney, Mrs. Ethel Bolger and Mrs. Seigrid Malhauser.

B. MacFadden says sex should be extolled and deified. And Bernarr seems to be doing his bit in that direction.

It has been proven that Jesus Christ could not have been an emaciated person, sickly and effeminate, as some artists have pictured Him and at the same time be able to give us some of the principles of living that He has given us. Good health is an essential to happier experiences with God. It is natural that a well body has a greater capacity for enjoying the Abundant Life. MONTEREY COUNTY HOLDS FIRST FAIR

Monterey, already known as the "City of Festivities," is to be the seat of the newly inaugurated Monterey County Fair. This fair, the first of its kind to be held in Monterey county, is scheduled for a five day run, October 8 to 12 inclusive.

Held on the Monterey peninsula, one of the world's finest and most widely known playgrounds, this occasion will be carried off with all the zest, enthusiasm and hospitality of the great old county. For the first time in California, thousands will be treated to the thrill of steeple-chasing. Other sports intended to appeal to the lover of horses will include flat races, polo, a horse show, and gymkana. The peninsula has long supplied a setting for sports closely akin to horsemanship.

The fair has been scheduled to assure a varied and continuous program of enjoyable activities. Agricultural and stock exhibits will demonstrate the great productivity of Monterey county. Entertainment, in addition to the horse races, etc., will include night boxing and wrestling performances, with sufficiently heavy purses to call for snappy action. There will be side-shows, all the fun for grown-ups and children, all the gaiety that not only belongs to the good old-fashioned county fair, but which peculiarly belongs to a fair held on the Monterey peninsula—where life is just naturally gay.

BIG BASIN-SARATOGA ROAD NOW CLOSED

The closing of that section of the Big Basin road between the floor of the Park and the Saratoga summit makes prohibitive the use of the Sky-line boulevard as a direct road into Big Basin, reports the touring department of the National Automobile Club.

Intensive construction has been under way for some time and has now reached the stage where permitting of travel over the road seriously impedes the progress of the work. The first heavy rains would make the roads entirely impassable. By closing the road, work may be rushed to completion and by next spring a splendid oiled gravel highway will be available for the entire distance between San Francisco and Santa Cruz.

Miss Vung Yui Ting, an 18-year-old Chinese girl, has arrived in San Francisco to enter exclusive Bryn Mawr university for women as winner of the single scholarship awarded to an Oriental schoolgirl each year.

TEACHERS ARE GUESTS OF JEFFERSON P. T. A.

On Thursday evening, September 18, the Jefferson Union High School Parent-Teachers' Association had a very enjoyable meeting. The occasion was the second monthly meeting, and was held as a reception to the teachers. Although the attendance was not all that could have been desired as to numbers, the evening proved both a pleasure to those who were there, and a success as far as members were concerned. The membership chairman reported before the close of the evening that "we were 100 per cent members." It was decided that the next meeting be followed by a whistle, to be held in the Senior room, and as there are twelve tables, every member is asked to be present and bring their friends.

After the meeting adjourned a short program was rendered by the following: Mrs. Bentley, vice-president, gave the address of welcome. Mrs. Orvilla Pauw sang two numbers, being accompanied by her son Roelof. Master Jack Mitchell, of the Eva Smith Hackett school of elocution, rendered two very enjoyable readings, which were extremely well received, owing to the excellency of the rendition, and also to the size of the boy who spoke. Mr. Stuart Ghent sang two popular ballads, being accompanied by Miss Potter.

At the end of the program all were invited to partake of refreshments in the cooking room. Delicious home made cakes, sandwiches and coffee were served. Mr. Bentley was named toastmaster, and he called upon most of the distinguished members present. Three of our City Councilmen, Mr. Sundermann, Mr. Twesten and Mr. Bodien, were present, and each spoke very interestingly. Among others who spoke were Principal James Ferguson, Mr. Biaggini, boys' athletic instructor, Miss Holtz, girls' athletic instructor, Mr. Van Houte, Miss Robinson, Mr. Hackley, Mrs. McKee, president, and others. Mr. Jensen, of the Mount Olivet cemetery, furnished very lovely flowers for the occasion, and the tables were made lovely with their help.

Judge Ellis C. Johnson united in marriage last Saturday, at his home on Evergreen avenue, Miss Jeanette Moore, of Alexander street, and Mr. Leslie Cable. The happy couple were attended by the bride's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Moore, of Alexander street. Immediately following the ceremony the bridal party returned to the Moore home, where they enjoyed a delightful wedding supper.

BETHEL FULL GOSPEL MISSION

The service next Sunday morning will be on the third plank of our Full Gospel platform, "Divine Healing." The topic will be, "Our Ministry of Healing." The following questions will be answered during the discourse: Does Jesus Christ heal today as He did when He was here on earth in person? What is the difference between Divine healing and Christian Science? If Jesus said in Mark 16:17, "And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover," what are we going to do about it today? Shall we throw it aside, and say it is for some past age, or shall we take the Scripture just as it stands and appropriate it for our daily use? Everyone is cordially welcome.

Pastor.

CHAPTER XIII

Hankerings

Prosperity was good for Will. He worked regular hours. He looked fresh and well. He adored the children and enjoyed them more than he ever had, and no woman ever had a more lovable husband than Ernestine. Two or three times a week they went to the theater, or to concerts, satisfying a long-starved hunger for beauty of sight and sound, for movement and color. Ernestine had picked up easily the old threads of social contact, as though she had been living in another city all this while. The old friends closed around her as naturally as though she had never been far from them, and in a little while the jargon, the familiar jokes, the odd intimacies were back with her again.

The money flowed in uncontrollably. They bought a second car, and there were beautiful clothes, new jewels and furs for Ernestine, charge accounts, a pony stabled at an expensive riding academy for the children. They talked of buying the house they were in, but already it seemed small. Will thought he would like to be nearer the lake and farther north. He felt that they needed more room.

One day in the fall when "Billy the Baby" was two years old, Ernestine entertained her bridge club and that afternoon seemed to her a perfect example of what life might be for a woman. She was proud of her home, proud of her thin china, her beautiful silver, her gracious friends. The new maid was well trained. The cook, stimulated by flattery, had outdone herself. The children came in and spoke to the guests who all exclaimed over them. They went out with their nurse to walk to the lake. Even Lillian, who had become silent and remote since her last trip to New York, displayed some of her old gay spirits. The talk fell into happy reminiscence of their childhood and girlhood.

After the guests were gone and Ernestine was helping the maid to tidy the living room, putting cushions in place, folding the card table covers, as the girl set the furniture back, Lillian stayed on, lying back in a chair of red velvet, her fair head pressed against the fabric, her arm hanging laxly over the side of the chair, smoking a cigarette, watching Ernestine. As the maid went out with the tables and covers and a tray of ash boxes, Ernestine flung herself down with an exclamation of weariness. Lillian astonished her.

"What's the matter with Will, kitten?"

"Why—he's all right. He's a little thin, but he'll pick up. He always loses weight in hot weather."

"But it's October now. It hasn't been really hot for weeks. I saw him on North Clark street today while I was waiting in the car for Loring, who was visiting one of his Greeks. He came and talked to me. He looked very white and thin, I thought—and his eyes were too bright—feverish. You must give him milk and eggs. Will is the type, linear I think you call it, that runs easily into T. B. He's indoors too much."

Ernestine was silent, thinking swiftly. "Will's all right, I think," she said a little shortly, but she looked grave. Lillian arched her brows in disbelief, but said no more. After a while she left in her own car, while Ernestine sat on the big couch, the silk and satin pillows, the wide low room with its charming furniture and carved fireplace forgotten in an instant.

What was Will doing on North Clark street? He and Mr. Poole had had an office there long ago. Will had been absent of late.

Ernestine rose abruptly and went to her room to change her dress before the children returned to climb upon her. Her mind went reluctantly to Will, as though forced against itself to consider dangers. Perhaps he needed mothering. He was subject to periods of nervous and mental depression because he could not remember that he had a body long enough to take care of it. She wondered if he were worried about money. They were spending it like water, but there seemed so much of it.

The children came in, rosy and laughing from their walk, and crowded upon her. She loved to have them close. They chattered eagerly as she sat down with them to their simple, appetizing supper, the nursemaid smiling and talking to her with a pretty deference. She and Will had dinner together, later, after the children had had half an hour with their father, and gone up to bed. But Will did not come in at their bedtime as he usually did. Disappointed, they finally trailed off up the stairs, and Ernestine wondered if she had missed Will.

"Has Mr. Todd been in, Molly?"

"He's in the garden, ma'am," the maid replied.

Ernestine went out through the dining room windows, across the tiled west porch and paused at the garden steps, to stare. Will stood about fifty feet away from her, leaning against the corner of the garage, his hat off, his head tilted back and his eyes fixed on the one tree that stood on the lot, a tall narrow poplar tree.

Ernestine had never seen him look like this. The slight habitual twist of satire that had become set on his mouth was gone. His lips were relaxed and full, like a child's. His black eyes, always so bright and alert, were soft now and strangely luminous in his pale thin face. And in his countenance was such yearning, such poignant beauty, that Ernestine could scarcely forbear crying out.

He had not noticed her, and silently she turned back to the house and silently closed the door behind her. For what was Will hankering there in the dusk? What did he worship? Something she did not know, see nor feel. Something beyond her. Again, in the absorption of life he had slipped away from her, into some secret path he had to follow alone. Again his mind had escaped while his body only remained by her side. The poplar tree—he was ailing, as he had ailed before.

She gathered herself together with a spiritual gesture. She strengthened herself. Something was imminent, something was to befall them. She realized with horror that they had not saved a cent, in all their new prosperity. She was confronted with the necessity to cease her butterfly whirling and turn squirrel again. For Will's run of luck would inevitably end in disaster of some kind that she could not even foresee.

Thinking of the longing and the sorrow of his face, Ernestine forgot for the moment how but a short time ago she had loved her house and blessed her possessions. Was there nothing she could do for Will? Nothing. She had learned this hard fact once, and let her not forget it now. Was he always to be lonely? Could not her body encompass him, her love enfold him? At times she could be close against his heart. At other times he would be remote from her, from all of them. Her spirit cried out in protest against the sense of alienation that was sweeping down upon her. Her throat ached bitterly.

She shook herself. This was nonsense. Because Will stared at a tree and a star she was invoking disaster. He had come in early and gone out in his garden to enjoy the evening, and the light had made him look wan.

But these thin mental comments died unheeded. Nothing could shake the deep fatalistic conviction that had laid itself upon her heart.

Ernestine watched Will during the winter months that followed without making much headway in her efforts to understand him. His abstraction at times was so intense that he moved like a somnambulist. The children bloomed. Peter was a tall strong boy with a lively mind and body. It was evident that Elaine would be able to start with her lessons in another year. The baby would be three in the summer, and he was every one's darling. Mamma was always sending him things from New York. She could not shop without remembering him.

But none of Ernestine's joy in her children could compensate for Will's strangeness. Sometimes he came out of his absorption and was feverishly bright and active. He was guarded with her, and put on an artificial nonchalance. She accepted this casually, without the irritation that had almost disrupted them before. His whole air and manner were the air and manner of a man who is pursuing a secret love affair, but Ernestine knew that Will's grief was not so simple as that.

Nevertheless, she began in a quiet unobtrusive way to spy upon him, being compelled by the need to know something more. His habits away from home were revealed to her by small patient inquiries.

He spent every morning at the Sun office and kept his strip well ahead, did his work in an orderly, workmanlike manner. In the afternoons it was the common belief that he went to the small outside studio where a younger named Hobbs worked on the movie cartoons for him. He spent some time there, and then either played bridge at the Press club, or at one or another of the clubs on Michigan boulevard where men had money and leisure to spend around the card tables in the late winter afternoons.

One day, downtown shopping, Ernestine went over to this movie studio, but the boy greeted her inquiry for Mr. Todd with such astonishment that she knew Will was seldom there.

"But the movies?"

"He comes in once a week or so and works all afternoon. He can do more work in an hour than anybody I ever saw. We keep them up, Mrs. Todd."

"I'm sure you do," said Ernestine, smiling at him. She talked to him for a while about his work and told him how Will had received his training doing just such chores for John Poole. Poole was little more than a legend to this youngster, she saw, but he was interested and flattered by her confidences.

Ernestine went away, filled with conviction, without more logical reason than the instruction of instinct. Lillian had seen Will on North Clark street. He was not spending his time at the outside studio. He was probably not playing cards as much as she thought.

He had opened the old studio where he and John Poole had worked for over two years and he was working there now, nearly every afternoon and sometimes probably at night. What was he doing?

She thought she would ask him, but that evening when he came in she was just coming down the stairs with Elaine, naked, on her arm. She was going to the kitchen to get some olive oil to warm, for she had found the skin dry on the child's arms.

Will had come in the front door and stood, drawing his scarf from within the collar of his great coat, staring up at her. His face flashed at her and he said imperiously:

"Stand still."

She stopped, in amazement, and stood poised on the stairs, the child on her arm, her simple house dress falling against her long limbs, and Will looked up at them with concentration, power in his eyes. After a strange interval he began to fold the silk scarf about his throat, to button his coat, to draw his gloves over his fingers, still staring at them, and then without a word, but with a smile of excitement, he turned and left the house.

It was very late when he returned, but Ernestine was awake, waiting for him. He came directly to her in her room, and his face was like a drunkard's, flushed and relaxed and happy. He caught her in his arms and kissed her passionately.

"Will—where have you been? Why are you so strange?" she asked him.

For answer he pressed his lips against her throat, he put her short dark hair back from her brow and stared at her, entranced with what he saw.

"You're so lovely," he said, "so beautiful, Ernestine. Not even the old masters have a face as lovely as yours. Your eyes—your eyes are sad, my sweet. Why are you sad? He ran his fingers over her face, his strong fingers that could touch lightly, wonderfully.

Ernestine felt as if her heart would break.

"Will—tell me. What ails you?" she implored him. "You haven't noticed me for weeks and weeks—all winter you haven't even seen me, and now—you come in like this."

He moved away from her. He was erect, triumphant, under the impulse of strong excitement.

"I've done it, Ernestine."

"What have you done?"

He made a gesture with his fingers—a stroke in their air, either with brush or pencil.

"I've made something new and different. Something I've wanted a long time. I'll tell you about it some day, when I'm ready. But now, don't question me. Just love me. As you used to, Ernestine. Can't you come to me as you used to come? My love, and mine alone?"

He wooed her, and she yielded to him, finding an instant's hurting joy in his old eagerness—his old flaring enthusiasm. This tide of human love was not new to her. Its sameness was like an enchantment. But after he was sleeping by her side, she wept secretly. He was so strange. Even in his ardor, deep honesty warned her that not her beauty, not her love, not her dearness had allured him—he had been impelled toward her by something within himself. His deep and secret springs of artistry were awakening, stirring. Solitary even in his passion and his love.

The next morning she rose with her heart hardened with determination, and after he had gone downtown, she hunted out among her possessions the old office key he had given her, so long ago. She took the bus and went back to Erie street, walked the old familiar way again and came to the old office, fitted her key in the lock and opened the door. The office was empty, and she entered and shut the door behind her.

The light in the place was fine. A long window crossed the back of the room, and here was a slanted table and stool. Ernestine moved to this and calmly, deliberately, she began to hunt for Will's secret. She had no more scruple about it than she would have had if he had been her son and in some trouble she must learn about.

In the middle of the drawing board, on white rice paper pinned down with tacks at the corners, was a sketch. Only a few strong lines in charcoal. She saw herself, coming down the stairs, the naked baby on her arm, one hand at the balustrade. The long lines of her limbs bore a subtle and flowing exaggeration. It was beautiful. It was alive. It moved and in its motion were poetry and sound. It was new, work of a kind she had never seen before. But she understood it. The outlines were clear and hard—the work had authority, fire, but nobody else had made a picture like this. Understanding filled her. Last night, Will had not loved her. Her heart had told her truly. It was this picture—this bright mental image of womanhood that he had loved, had taken into his arms and caressed.

"No, no," she whispered. "That's morbid. It is I whom Will loves. It is only his way."

On the corner of the sheet, like a signature, were the round hard splashes of tears. Ernestine wept, too, standing there and looking at this new work and thinking of Will—and the Todd cats.

She looked through everything and found material with the dust of a year upon it. In a pile were pictures of the poplar tree. He had made the tree again and again. She caught a hint of desperation. He had been deliberately careless. He had distorted the limbs, but neither the carelessness nor the distortion had given him the quality that lay now on the board with the charcoal sketch of herself on the stairs—a thing called Life. Vitality!

Months of work. Months of struggle. Secret, silent—a new idea, a new stirring pain goading him out of his path.

And every morning he had to go and make the cat cartoons. He had to go from the Sun to the movie studio. When he was longing to experiment with this new conception. He was ready to leave satire for a new form of beauty. He was ready to establish a new and modern school of work.

It was not an unnatural development. Looking back, it seemed to Ernestine that the years had conspired in order to accomplish this. She remembered the little boy with his leg in a brace, who had made the book of bird pictures for her—a book she still loved and possessed, and which she had been showing to Peter only a day or two ago. Will had so loved the color of wings.

She recalled the water colors on his mother's walls; the smudged pictures of John Pryor when he was a baby—crude but warm. She remembered what Mrs. Todd had said—all the neighbors thought Will would be a great artist some day. If he were not subjugated to her biological necessities!

Through the newspaper environment and his hero worship of John Poole he had become a cartoonist. And he had had hard work and desperate struggle to accomplish that. But the very things this success had brought him had been a means of releasing this deeper, more sincere impulse. The comfort, the affluence, the sense of security, all had enabled him to begin to give heed to another voice.

And Will had thought in his simplicity that he could have a secret! He had imagined that he could, in his idle hours, pursue this new and de-

Wealth Showered Upon Favorites of Fortune

An American artist named Mott traveled to the Pribilof Islands in a sealing vessel a year ago to paint some pictures of seals in their native home, and one day noticed a curious bank of sand lying close along the shore. He dug into it, and found beneath the sand a mass of bones. They were seal bones—millions of them—which had been flung up by the sea in the course of centuries. Further search has shown that there are miles of these bone deposits along the shores of the islands. One pile is a mile long, half a mile wide, and six feet deep. Now, bones are one of the best of all fertilizers, and the value of the find is simply gigantic—far greater than that of any gold mine.

Simple Blackboard

Blackboards of any size are usually quite expensive, but one woman found a way to make one that costs less than 75 cents. She bought an inexpensive dark-green window shade and a can of flat black paint. Two coats of the paint were applied to the shade, which when dry became a blackboard that could be rolled up out of the way when not in use.

lightful gift of artistry. He had experimented here alone with new tools, new methods, and thought that no one would ever know. Ernestine was wiser. She knew the consequences of activity, secret or open. This studio was going to destroy the cats as certainly as love destroys infatuation.

She stooped and brushed lightly with her lips the charcoal image of herself descending the stairs. She locked the door and went away, her lips firm, her eyes glowing in her lovely face.

"Whenever you are ready, Will, I will be ready, too."

But Will did not seem to be ready. He had changed. He had become silent, morose, irritable. There was no question now as to where he was spending his time, for he played bridge hours every day. He won constantly. Ernestine kept him as clean of money as she could, subverting all that she could lay hands on to her own purposes. She did not know how much money he won at cards, but his mania was a new thing, and she could not understand it. One night at a dance in the club to which he belonged she saw him through the open door of the cardroom, sitting at a heavy round table, his face absolutely set, his dark eyes watchful, playing in an intense absorption.

"How does he play?" she asked her partner, a friend of Will. "I've played with him, of course, but always with women, and he seemed indifferent—careless."

"I wish I could get him at a table when there were women there," the man, a middle-aged illustrator, answered. "He has a great deal of my money. Why, he plays an extraordinarily good game, and every one likes to play with him because he minds his own business. He plays for study, but he doesn't row. He makes no mistakes, but he doesn't jump on the fellow who does. And cards! Oh, boy—he has them. He has an absolutely marvelous memory."

Ernestine knew this. Will's memory was part of his equipment as an artist. He would be able to visualize each trick that had fallen, without error, she knew. But she was troubled. She understood the psychological use of the word "substitution," and it occurred to her in connection with Will at the bridge tables, but she could not get the thing clearly. Will was drugging himself with the mechanical occupation of cards. The cards interested, absorbed, fascinated him. The meager fascination of the game were useful to him as a means of stilling something—she could not quite get it. She could not ask him whether he had ceased going to the little office. She felt balked and wounded.

One day when he telephoned that he would not eat at home, and came in after midnight, he flung down on the table a roll of bills.

"I've been playing for ten cents a point. Won rubber after rubber," he said indifferently.

Ernestine picked up the money and counted it.

"This will pay for—" she began, and Will exclaimed passionately:

"My G—d, Ernestine, what do you do with the money? I never see you that you don't have your hand held out to me."

Her fear gave her sudden fury.

"Am I to account to you for every penny?" she exclaimed. "I did without, long enough. Now that you're earning, are you going to be niggardly with me? Don't you dare ask me what I do with my money!"

He made no answer, his face bored and scornful. She had been thinking that when he came in she would try to talk to him, but now the moment was passed. He undressed and got into bed, and said in his quick irritable way:

"Either turn out the light or go somewhere else. I'm tired."

"From working?" she asked, and then regretted swiftly. That was too much like that other time—that other pain.

Will did not answer, but turned his back and flung his arm, in the blue pajama sleeve, up over his eyes. Ernestine put out the lights except the small lamp at her side of the bed, and sat on the bed for a while, her feet drawn up and her arms clasped around her knees, thinking, her mind turning this way and that, her heart full of pain.

Range fires in Santa Clara County decreased by more than 50 per cent over last year and the area burned over was but one-tenth of what it was in 1929, according to County Fire Warden Don King. This record is all the more outstanding because of the forty fires this season, seventeen were caused by a lightning storm. The fires were the first caused by lightning in that region in nine years.

San Mateo is looking forward to acquisition of a civic center by purchase of the Tobin Clark County property at El Camino Real and Ninth avenue for $100,000. According to the crew of the tug, water was thrown hundreds of feet into the air and huge clouds of steam a half mile in extent rose from the spot where the meteor fell into the water.

When the famous old King Midas gold mine at Harrison Gulch was sold for taxes recently, Joseph Moore of Cazadero, for years shift boss and later foreman, was the only bidder. George, a wee citizen of the North side, had committed a forbidden act and was being reprimanded by his father.

"George, I told you I'd spank you if you did that, didn't I?" asked his father.

"Yes," George replied, a little forlornly.

"Well, what shall I do with you?" asked his father, exasperated.

"How do you think I know?" came the reply, "I've never been a father." —Indianapolis News.

NOW IS TIME TO BUILD

Now is the time to build, to remodel and to modernize, according to advice given by leading contractors and material men. It is possible that the present opportunity afforded by low material costs and high labor efficiency will not recur in several years to come, they say.

This statement is substantiated by the heating research bureau of the C. A. Dunham Company of Chicago, which has made a recent study of labor and material costs, showing that great savings may be made by taking advantage of the present situation.

An interesting feature of the report is that labor is co-operating effectively in reducing construction costs, not by accepting lower wages, but by doing more work in a day. Union bricklayers in Chicago are said to be laying nearly twice as many bricks in a day as formerly, while carpenters and other workers have increased their efficiency 30 to 40 per cent.

During the summer and early fall there has been much remodeling, including the replacing of heating plants with differential systems which effect large fuel savings. Economy in operating costs is being sought, as well as in construction itself.

By having needed work done now, great savings are possible, besides the employment of surplus labor will aid in hastening the return of general prosperity.

BOY PROHI SLEUTHS

Correspondence courses in prohibition detective work are now being given under the direction of H. M. Dengler of the Prohibition Bureau for the benefit of enforcement officers in the field, it is announced.

A few days ago a reporter got hold of a textbook containing instructions, some of which are interesting. Some extracts, said to have been taken from the book, follow:

"Assume some line of business which will give you the entree desired. You may pretend you are getting up a directory to cover your reason for asking who occupies the office."

"A man or a boy on a bicycle can follow a truck (containing malt) without suspicion."

"Two boys can engage in games near the home of the suspect without attracting attention, whereas a man loitering would soon arouse suspicion."

In several places in the book, it is said, the use of boys to spy on suspects is recommended.

Any attempt at prohibition enforcement probably requires detective work, but the employment of young boys for the purpose seems to be a little far fetched, to put it mildly.

By teaching them to practice deception at such an early age, isn't there danger that they might form habits of thought and action which would unfavorably affect their future life?

IN TUNE WITH THE WORLD

In the materialism of present day civilization we must not forget to cultivate the aesthetic side of human life. The Arts have had their part in the development of civilization, and music has probably played the greatest part of all.

Music is instinctive—it is universal. You may pierce the thickest jungle to come upon the settlement of some savage tribe, and there you will find these aborigines experiencing the joy of primitive music from the tom toms near the tribal king. In fact, their lives are practically governed by music. It is their call to battle, their radio, their telephone, their newspaper. With it they send messages, and give outlet to their feelings. It plays an important part in their religious rites and festivals. With music they express their thanksgiving for deliverance from danger or famine, and with music they make their lamentations for the dead.

Then you may journey to the very seats of culture and learning, and you will find the cream of civilization enjoying the music of the world's greatest composers. As humanity has advanced, music has kept pace with it, and it is still used to express the complexities of the human soul—its aspirations, its loves, its sorrows, its bewilderment or exultation. Fortunate is he who can release his emotions through the medium of music, and fortunate is he to whom music brings solace or inspiration, or merely the glorious expression of the joy of life. Music—the universal language that needs no interpreter when soul speaks to soul.

We in Daly City should give music its rightful place in our lives. Within us all there exists a fundamental something that responds to music—a something that may be coarsened or refined according to the aesthetic influences with which we surround ourselves. A musical community is a delightful place to live in, and there is no need for anyone in Daly City being without music in some form. We can all be in tune with the world.

OBJECTS OF EDUCATION

In a recent series of articles, Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, discussed some of the laws which he believes underlie a thoroughly modern education. And coming from such a distinguished source, they are worthy of serious consideration.

Among the principles he sets forth are these: We learn by action rather than by absorption; learning is specific rather than general; the best things to study are those which are important to our life and work; we should study the things that will most directly contribute to our efficiency and happiness.

Like many other progressive educators of the present day, Dr. Frank does not believe that a college education is either necessary or desirable for everyone. The four years spent in college might often be better employed in gaining practical experience in a workshop or in business. It depends largely on the natural talents and inclinations of a young person whether he should go to college.

For one who is of a studious disposition and aspires to enter one of the learned professions, a college education is indispensable, of course. For those who go to college merely to be able to say that they have gone to college it is a waste of valuable time.

As Dr. Frank very truthfully says: "We cannot prove that a college education guarantees a big income, or that it makes us happier men or women. Most of the old arguments for college education are in the ash-can."

WHEAT POOL TROUBLES

That pooling of farm products, even on the largest scale, is not a panacea for the farmer's ills seems to be illustrated by the difficulties that now beset the great Canadian wheat pool, which has been forced to limit first payments on the present crop to 60 cents a bushel. In former years the initial payment has never been less than 85 cents.

As the 60 cents a bushel advanced by the pool is considerably less than the market price, and as many farmers have pressing obligations to meet, there is a great temptation to "bootleg" wheat to buyers outside the pool, instead of accepting the 60 cent advance and waiting for the remainder due.

Last fall the pool withheld much wheat from sale in an unsuccessful effort to force up prices in foreign markets. Now it is faced with a carry-over of about 128,000,000 bushels in addition to the large new crop.

It all comes back to the old law of supply and demand. The fact is that there is more wheat in the world than can be sold at a price which will yield farmers a profit. And while co-operative marketing as exemplified by the pool may sometimes work advantageously, it seems doomed to break down when a world situation such as the present persists over a long period.

Anyway, we're glad Mr. Gerard's list of sixty-four "rulers" didn't include a crooning tenor.

PUBLIC MEN

In glancing through the editorial columns of the metropolitan press, one can not but note the ease and alacrity manifested by some writers in criticizing the officials at the helm of government. How natural it has become to take issue with this or that statesman, or to cite his failures rather than his accomplishments. How quickly enthusiasm cools and the once ardent constituent becomes apathetic and critical.

It is seemingly easier to criticize an executive for those things he has left undone than to examine conscientiously and acclaim his record of performance. Errors of omission are frequently played up by an antagonistic press far more invitingly to the reader than the actual errors of commission, even though the latter may be few and far between.

A legislator introduces on the floor of the House or Senate a measure designed to accomplish a great, public good. Supporters jump in and solidly back the lawmaker—for a time—then owing to the fact that stupendous obstacles are not overcome in short order, these supporters become lukewarm and their one-time ardent enthusiasm turns to pessimism and dark forebodings.

Again, it is quite a habit these days to charge everything of an unfavorable nature to the administration. A collapse in the stock market, trade depression, unemployment, etc., are directly laid at the door of the Chief Executive.

Instead of maintaining a calm, clear faith and trust in the men elected by popular suffrage to high office, there are those hysterical ones who fly into paroxysms of terror or rage and, forgetting their earlier confidence, make generous use of the invective, thereby offering no real solution of the problem involved but muddling things generally, hampering the executives and bewildering their fellow countrymen.

Let us have faith in our public men. They are but human beings like ourselves, even though endowed with that particular astuteness that their respective offices demand. They can accomplish a great deal more with the generous support of a trusting electorate. While there may be some officials who are unworthy, the great majority are conscientious and try to do the right thing.

In the interest of the Nation, let our people encourage those men who are holding the reins of government and are faithfully performing their duties. In this way they will be enabled to render even greater service. The country will benefit correspondingly and our citizens will become more closely knit in the common fabric of sturdy Americanism.

FRENZIED RETAILING

The wide variety of commodities handled by drug stores has long been a subject of jest, but the worst—or best—is yet to come, according to a recent review of the retailing situation. More than 5,000 drug stores have added a 10 cent department, carrying a large assortment of articles found in the 5 and 10 cent stores. Several lines usually found only in department or clothing stores are also being introduced.

But the druggists are not the only ones who are branching out. Filling stations are adding tires, tobacco and cigarettes, sandwiches, and even books to their stock. Tobacco stores are handling some general merchandise, besides installing soda fountains and luncheonettes.

Chain food stores are said to be planning to add proprietary medicines, lunches and drinks.

If this trend keeps up, we may soon be buying our periodicals at a filling station and our automobile tires at a news stand.

A PUBLISHER'S GIFT

Philadelphia is to have a great civic cultural center through the gift of $4,000,000 by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, famed newspaper and magazine publisher of that city.

A beautiful building covering nearly a whole city block will be erected, having an auditorium to seat 4,000, a civic theatre seating 1,500, and a smaller auditorium, seating 600.

The large auditorium will be used for concerts by the Philadelphia symphony orchestra and performances by the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, also as a public forum and for large gatherings of various kinds. The whole will be managed on a non-profit basis.

It is encouraging to note the increasing tendency to make such gifts on the part of men of great wealth. In his newest philanthropic enterprise Mr. Curtis, now 80 years old, is making a notable contribution, not only to the culture and enjoyment of the present generation, but to many succeeding ones.

A banker advises using as much care in selecting Senators as is given to selecting golf and fishing outfits. But that would be bad for a lot of Senators.

Bone-dry insurance at reduced rates for teetotalers is the latest development in that field. Bone-head insurance remains to be worked out.

Clever Abe Martinism by Kin Hubbard: "Elmer Swank, leader of the jazz orchestra at the New Palace hotel, likes it so well he talks some of takin' music lessons."

Whether administrations are responsible or not, they get blamed for bad times. And never fail to take credit for good ones.

Most expeditions which seek for sunken treasure at the bottom of the sea meet disappointment. An important recent exception is the finding of the liner Egypt, sunk in a collision off the French coast in 1922. Italian divers found and identified the ship, which is being explored in an effort to salvage about five million dollars in gold which the vessel is said to have carried.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or even increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store, Edwards' Drug Store, Mission street, near San Jose avenue.

Senator Caraway of Arkansas and lobby investigating fame is done with aviation, at least for the present. He flew from Washington to Sedalia, Mo., and back, suffering severely from air sickness. Upon reaching terra firma at the national capital he said: "I'm through with flying until I get to be an angel."

In Tune with the World

"Let me make the songs of a people, and let who will make their laws," so one wise man has expressed the importance of music.

Music is the universal language. It is understood, appreciated by, and inspires all people; leaping the barriers of difference in language, race, color and creed. Because of its universality, it is one of the great forces working toward universal peace and understanding.

Every people, every nation has its music; an understanding and appreciation of this music gives us an understanding and appreciation of its people.

Nature has endowed every individual with a love of music. It is the natural expression of our emotions. Each one of us responds to some strain, tune or melody. Because of this, music should be encouraged in our homes, in our schools, in our churches—everywhere in our community.

Music is a necessity of life in every community. An investment in music yields rich dividends in the way of delightful entertainment and the joys of living. Fortunately, good music is within the reach of everyone today.

Every home should be "in tune with the world." Every family should be afforded the opportunity of enjoying the best in music, for modern music conserves the home.

Such modern miracles—as the phonograph, the player piano and the radio—enable every member of the family circle to gain a better appreciation and understanding of music.

All children should have the opportunity to develop their musical talent, every home should possess one or more musical instruments. The talented youth should be given proper instruction by music teachers in our music schools.

It is the duty of every community to provide its citizens with a civic band, or orchestra. Every community should have a director of music in its schools, teaching appreciation and knowledge of music, furnishing voice and instrumental training.

"Music hath charms—" Let us take full advantage of these charms. Let's, as a community, be "in tune with the world."

Music keeps us in tune with each other as well as in tune with the wor'd. Let it be foremost in

AUTO DRIVER LICENSE LAWS CREDITED WITH SAVING 22,000 LIVES

Not less than 22,000 lives have been saved as a result of the enforcement of automobile drivers' license laws in California and eight other states of the Union having such statutes, according to the results of an exhaustive study by the National Safety Council set forth in a report received by the California State Automobile Association.

The survey covered an average period of eight years in each state. In addition to California, the inquiry included Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Vermont, and Arizona. The statisticians engaged in the investigation found that these states had an average of 29 per cent less automobile fatalities than they would have experienced had their percentage of increase been the same as states with no drivers' license laws.

This statistical investigation, showing the probable saving of 22,000 lives, is accepted as convincing evidence to prove the practical effectiveness of well enforced state drivers' license laws.

The period which was covered in the study extends back to 1916, when the first of the state driver's license laws was put into effect. The nine states have had their drivers' license laws in effect for different periods of time, with an average of about eight years for all of them.

The statistical computation took into consideration all possible variations of conditions between the groups of states having such laws and those states which did not have such laws. Both groups, for example, have a diversity of geographical, racial, economic, climatic and other conditions. Both groups have shown rapid increase in licensed automobiles per 100,000 population, and increasing road congestion, including inter-state travel.

The states not having drivers' license laws suffered a total of about 19,000 motor vehicle fatalities in 1929.

A few states now have so-called drivers' license laws not requiring examination of new drivers and in most cases not administered by a strong centralized state bureau. The figures for these states do not indicate that such laws have reduced accidents. These states were considered as non-license states in the study.

THE BUSINESS SITUATION

The president's prediction that the income tax slash granted for 1930 can probably be made again for 1931, plus the surprisingly low unemployment figure shown by the census, throws considerable new light on the business situation.

The unemployment figure of approximately 2,500,000 is an estimate, the official figures not yet being complete, but is regarded by the census bureau as probably accurate. The figure is not much higher than the estimates for the prosperous years of 1927, 1928 and 1929, and is much less than political party estimates put forward during the 1928 campaign.

If the national income is such that the income tax slash can be continued without putting the surplus in jeopardy, it seems reasonable to conclude that conditions are better than many calamity howlers would have us believe.

DANGER THAT NEVER SLEEPS

Many people have the mistaken idea that fire prevention is a Twentieth Century fantasy, born of vanishing forests and high-priced lumber and fostered by those who love the mountains, forests and God's great outdoors, remarks the National Automobile Club.

But the waste and destruction wrought by fire in field and forest were known long before the pyramids were built. Harken to the words of the ancient prophets.

"... for a fire has devoured the pastures of the wilderness, and a flame hath burned all the trees of the field. Yea, the beasts of the field pant unto thee, for a fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as a garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness."

Throughout all the centuries history is marked with the downfall of great nations that have mistreated their forests, but our vacation-loving people of America have yet to learn the important lesson that "carelessness and haste bring fire and waste." And this is doubly true of California, which for the past two years has held the unenviable record of being one of the worst fire states in the Union.

Recently the Prince of Wales received three military promotions simultaneously—from captain to air marshal, from captain to vice-admiral, and from colonel to lieutenant-general.

SAN MATEO COUNTY FALL FLOWER SHOW

The chrysanthemum, which will be exhibited in all its modern forms at the San Mateo Fall Flower Festival, October 24, 25, and 26, has an historical background that surpasses nearly all of the flowers that bloom in California gardens.

According to Chinese history, the flower was cultivated in China over 2,000 years ago. In 500 B. C., Confucius mentioned the chrysanthemum under the name of "Li-Ki." In Japan the cultivation dates back at least to 1186 A. D., for swords of the Mikados were decorated with engravings of the flower. It's European history dates back to 1688, when a merchant of Dantzig, Holland, one Jacob Breyne, describes two types, under the name of Matricaria Japonica, in red, white, purple, yellow, flesh and crimson tints.

In 1690, Rheede, a Dutch scientist, described a variety cultivated in India and known as "Gool-doodi."

The earliest specimens introduced into England by James Cunningham in 1698, and they are still preserved in the herbarium of the British Museum. In 1764, living specimens were sent from Ningpo, China, and were cultivated by Phillip Millor in the Chelsea Physic Garden.

The "mum" soon spread over European gardens, and in 1897, a German show included 100 varieties and types.

In the United States the first definite record was in 1747. A Dr. H. P. Wolcott, of Cambridge, Mass., was the first American to raise seedlings. By 1894, some 163 varieties originated in the United States were catalogued. In all approximately 2,100 varieties have been originated in the United States, of which about 225 are catalogued and grown now. The first exhibition held by the Chrysanthemum Society of America was in 1902 in Chicago.

San Mateo county has become the American center of commercial culture of chrysanthemums and blooms from peninsula gardens are shipped all over the United States, during the whole of the long blossoming season.

Evidently seeking to live up to the patriotism suggested by their names, George Washington, Jr., and Francis Scott Key were among those enrolled this summer in the civilian military training camp at Fort Eustis, Va.

NEW LINK SHORTENS THE TAMALPAIS TRIP

The new link, connecting the Panoramic highway, extending from Mill Valley to Stinson Beach, with the Ridgecrest boulevard, materially shortens the driving time and mileage to the summit of Mt. Tamalpais, reports the touring department of the National Automobile Club.

San Francisco motorists may use the regular highway to Mill Valley. East Bay motorists may ferry to San Francisco and thence to Sausalito, or may use the Richmond-San Rafael ferry to Point San Quentin, thence over the San Rafael road to the junction of the new Alto cut-off, following the latter into Mill Valley.

Leaving Mill Valley, follow the Muir Woods National Monument signs to the toll gate. Turn right at this point, going up the mountain instead of through the toll gate. This is the new panoramic highway, and it fully deserves its name as it winds over gradual grades towards the summit of the mountain, each turn bringing forth a new vista of the surrounding mountain side, the bay and the ocean.

Approximately five miles of this road is followed before one again turns to the right, the road ahead going to Stinson Beach and Bolinas. The new road, from the junction to the Ridgecrest road, is approximately one and one-half miles in length, meeting the old road to the summit at a point a little over three miles from the Tavern. Meals and sleeping accom-

BAY SHORE HIGHWAY WORK PROGRESSES

Work on the Bay Shore highway between South San Francisco and Burlingame is progressing rapidly, one-half of the road being paved at a time. Until such time as this work has been completed, it is advisable to use the Peninsula highway (U. S. No. 101), as numerous pieces of construction equipment increases the hazard of driving on the Bay Shore road.

commodations are available at the Tavern.

An attractive alternative trip is to descend the mountain via the Ridgecrest boulevard, past Alpine Lake, the Meadow Club grounds, into Fairfax and San Anselmo. It would be hard to find any trip as easily accessible to any metropolitan area that could afford the ever-changing panorama of mountains, lakes, forest, bay and ocean beaches than is to be found in the foregoing suggested trip.

RAINIER NATIONAL PARK ENJOYS HEAVY TRAVEL

Travel figures for Rainier National Park have this year exceeded all records of the past, according to a report received by the touring department of the National Automobile Club. Up to September 1, the 1930 visitor figures exceeded those of 1929 by more than 50,000.

Colder days are coming. So plan now to have convenient warmth and comfort.

With modern gas-fired heating equipment, your finger's touch controls the heat. You make no trips to the basement on cold mornings. You build no fires. Mother does not tend the furnace when father is away.

And gas is a clean fuel. All burnt gases go outdoors through the chimney without mingling with the pure, warm air in your home.

As a result, your furniture, upholstery, and curtains stay clean. The exterior of your home does not need re-painting so often.

Come into our office or a dealer's store and see the Furnaces and Boilers for heating the entire home. Feminine Gender
Tom was always a troublesome boy, and at grammar he was always at his worst. "What gender is 'phonograph'?" asked his teacher one day. "Feminine gender," he promptly replied. "No, no; it's neuter!" returned teacher sharply. "Well, it ought to be feminine," was his unblinking reply, "because it repeats everything it hears."

To Live
So live that when thy loved ones are taken from thy side, thou needst not say: "Oh! that I had loved them more."

Cue For Applause
Salesman (showing customer some sports stockings): "Just the thing for you. Worth double the money. Latest pattern, fast colors, holeproof, and won't shrink, and it's a good yarn." Customer: "Very well told, too."

For Score Cards for Whist Parties call at this office.

Boss: "There's two dollars missing from my desk drawer and no one but you and I have a key to it." Office Boy: "Well, let's each put a dollar back and say no more about it."

Kindling and Block Wood.

"How did you get banged up that way?" "Talking when I should have been listening."

Must Be Crowded
Null: "I started out on the theory that the world has an opening for me." Void: "And you found it?" Null: "Well, rather. I'm in the hole now." Hundreds of thousands of people burn Coal—because of its year-in and year-out economy.

We have brushed up against a number of Summer tourists lately, and we see one thing, that they have made sure they are not going to die of snakebite.
